Clausen Urges More Aid To Population Programs

MEXICO CITY - The presi-dent of the World Bank called Tuesday for increased aid to population programs as delegates from 140 countries began their first full round of debate at the United Na-tions-sponsored International Conference on Population here. Even a small increase could make a vast difference to population growth and to maternal and child health, said A.W. Clausen, whose report is among the most widely circulated documents at the UN conference.

Although Mr. Clausen made no direct reference to the controversy over President Ronald Reagan's policy that suggests poor nations can cope with population growth through economic progress, he strongly endorsed continued population planning and assistance. Mr. Clausen said the World

Bank's report, presented last month in Washington, offers evidence showing that the international community must work together in a renewed effort to slow population growth.

Any of the three cases could be the vehicle that Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and his allies on the court have been seeking for a fundamental revision of the court's doctrines on the separation of

For many years, the court's em-phasis in religion cases was on the concept of separation. But the court's emphasis in recent deci-sions has shifted to a quite different concept; accommodation, Instead of asking how religion and government can best be kept apart, the court is now much more interested in deciding what government can or must do to remove obstacles to voluntary religious observance.

The concept of accommodation s not new, Just as separation has its roots in the First Amendment's "establishment clause." which states that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," the notion of accommo-dation is independently rooted in the next six words of the same sentence, "or probibiting the free evercise thereof."

Accommodation has always fig-ured as a kind of subtext to the court's separation decisions. But when the court ruled last March that the city of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, could include a Nativity scene as part of its official Christ mas display, accommodation assumed a major new dimension.

"Nor does the Constitution reuire complete separation of church and state." Justice Burger wrote in his opinion for the 5-to-4 majority. "It affirmatively mandates accommodation, not merely tolerance, of all religions, and forhids hostility toward any."

A powerful advocate for accommadation is the Reagan adminis tration, which has entered all three lute right not to work on a day the cases as a friend of the court. The administration is arguing in defense of an Alabama law permit-

Lange Said to Bar Change in Ban on U.S. Nuclear Ships

PORT MORESBY, Papua New Guinea - Prime Minister Bob Hawke of Australia reportedly failed Tuesday to persuade New Zealand's new prime minister, David Lange, to drop his han on U.S. nuclear warships visiting New Zeatand ports.

Mr. Hawke and Mr. Lange, visiting Papua New Guinea for a Commonwealth regional meeting, met for the first time since Mr. Lange's Labor government came to power in elections on July 14.

Australian government officials said that Mr. Hawke told Mr. Lange privately that he believed their defense alliance with the United States known as ANZUS required its members to allow nuclear warships to visit their ports.

But Mr. Lange told Mr. Hawke that the ban, part of his govern-ment's drive for a nuclear-free South Pacifie, is not negotiable, of-employee designates as the sabbath. In all three cases, the statutes or programs were struck down by appellate courts on the ground that they amounted to an unconstitutional "establishment" of religion. None of the cases directly involves the federal government. But all three give the administration an opportunity to press its argument that the court's precedents have turned the establishment clause, as the government says in its trief in the Connecticut case, into "an instrument of hostility toward religious toleration." In its hrief in support of the Alabama "moment of silence," the administration argues that to hold unconstitutional an opportunity for silent prayer is to insist that any opportunity for religious practice, even in the unspoken thoughts of schoolchildren, be extirpated from the public sphere."

While the Connecticut case. Thornton v. Caldor Inc., deals with a subject that is less familiar than school prayer or parochial aid, it brings the issue of separation versus accommodation into the sharpest focus.

The Connecticut Supreme Court declared unconstitutional a law that prohibited any employer from requiring an employee to work on the day the employee designated as the sahhath. The Connecticut court said that because the law did not apply to time off for nonreligious reasons, it lacked a valid secular purpose and had the impermissable primary effect" of "advancing re-

Under the Human Volcano

Delegates to the World Population Conference under way in Mexico City need only look out the window to see the baleful shadow of a human volcano. Of 17 million people in Mexico's capital, two of five are jobless; a sixth lack sewage; all breathe a toxic smog. Government struggles to promote birth control in a mostly Roman Catholic society, to brake a growth that beggars it.

Yet in that place, and in the name of freedom, the Reagan administration aims to curb the freedom of others to decide how best to contain this human tide. It intends to stop contributing to any control programs that condone abortions. It even questions the value of family planning, preferring to hlame the ill effects of fertility on Third World resistance to technology or capitalism. Or so asserts n White House paper prepared for the Mexico meeting.

If these ideas are truly policy, they may cut $100 million from the $240 million the United States annually contributes to a global effort to encourage smaller families. U.S. law and United Nations policy already stipulate that this money may not be spent on abortions. But abortions remain legal in many countries, in-cluding, of course, the United States.

Plainly, the administration would like a minority of Americans to believe that its values will decide which countries are morally fit for family-planning assistance. And this from an administration that struggles so hard against the dogmas of others in global forums.

The argument that free enterprise is the best remedy for explosive population increases is just one more dogma. Different societies have different experiences. In free-enterprising (and Catholic) Brazil, the government has now concluded that ton many people means too little growth and is now promoting family planning. But in any case, by what right or logic does the Reagan administration expound its doctrines as universal writ? The world's population has been growing geometrically, and at current rates will increase from 4.7 billion to 6 billion by century's end. Most of this increase will occur in poorer countries whose stability is at risk and whose governments plead for help. Having helped to create that consensus, the United States now flees from it.

There is nothing immoral in Mexico's encouraging smaller, stronger families - or in France's providing incentives for larger ones. What is immoral is to chase votes at home by self-righteously castigating the poor abroad.

A Magic Budget-Balancer

It is nowhere near Thanksgiving, but President Reagan seems determined to bring back the biggest turkey of them all: the constitutional amendment purporting to require a balanced budget. As a political maneuver, it is transparent. As a fiscal measure, a fantasy. And if it were ever enacted, it would likely have gruesome, unanticipated consequences. Take these points in turn.

A transparent political device: Ronald Reagan and his Republican Party, unable to balance the budget in four years and unwilling even to promise to balance it in the next four, want to convince voters they really believe in it anyway, Presto! Alakazam! A magic constitutional amendment appears, promising to establish a balanced budget forever and ever. Mr. Reagan has done for the balanced budget issue what Riebard Nixon did for the crime issue: He has made his and every other politician's promises unbelievable.

A fiscal fantasy: Mr. Reagan's own failure to come even remotely close to balancing the budget illustrates the problem. Americans do not want domestic spending cut significantly. They want military spending to continue to increase (though perhaps not quite as rapidly as Mr. Reagan intends). The only realistic way to attack the Reagan deficit is to increase taxes

Representative Carroll A. Campbell Jr. of South Carolina, an advocate of the amendment, was asked what tax increases and/or spending cuts he would advocate to balance the hudget now. "There is no reason for me to outline that right now," he said. No reason, that is, unless he wants people to take his proposal seriously.

Gruesome consequences: From right to left, no serious observer believes a) that the federal budget can he balanced any time soon or b) that it is desirable to balance it each and every year. So the first thing that would happen, should Mr. Reagan's constitutional amendment actually pass, is that ways would be found to get around it. Figures would be cooked, statistics jumbled, a whole set of arcane circumlocutions developed, so that politicians and officeholders and judges could pretend that an unenforceable constitutional amendment was actually being enforced.

The Reagan position invites ridicule, and he no doubt will get it. Here is a politician, who has proved spectacularly unable to balance a budget, running around proclaiming his support for an automatic mechanism that will ehow do it for him.

Oadhafi's Groundless Protest

It will be difficult for the United Nations to give even moral support to Colonel Moamer Qadhafi's protest against what he charges was a violation of his country's air space hy American planes in an exercise over the Gulf of Sidra. His original claim of sovereignty over the gulf was challenged by Mediterranean states as well as by the maritime powers. Even the Soviet Union joined the United States in 1974 in registering objections to Colonel Oadhafi's claim.

Settling Hong Kong's Future

None of the British newspaper commentary on the agreements reached with Beijing on Hong Kong mentions the immense difference between the way London has negotiated with the Chinese and the British attitude to Spain and Argentina over Gibraltar and the Falklands. Here indeed we see vindication of Mao Zedong's assertion that "power comes out of the harrel of a gun." In the case of Hong Kong the gun is in the hands of the Chinese.

- The Neue Zürcher Zeitung (Zurich).

The Hong Kong reversion question has much to do - in the future, if not at present with a peaceful reunification of Taiwan and China. If Hong Kong is allowed to retain everything it now has except its sovereignty. then one can reasonably hope that Tarwan, ton, will be allowed to maintain its status quo under Chinese rule.

Sudan, Divided, Might Stand

Twelve years ago. Gaafar Nimeiri ended a secessionist war that had lasted since before Sudan's independence in 1956 by granting southerners a large measure of autonomy. Last year he undid this good work by dividing the south into three parts. He has imposed Koranic law on Sudan. He says it will be applied only to Moslems — that is northerners. But some southerners have already been norribly penal-ized for disobeying it. So the southern war is hotting up again. If the south wants to secede again, why not let it? In terms of wealth, the new country would be no more unworkable than other similarly landlocked tribal conglomerates. Short of violent secession, the southerners should be allowed to try sorting out their problems themselves.

A Lesser Evil in Israel?

The grand Israeli coalition that Shimon Peres is trying to assemble is not a satisfactory instrument of government but it is better than another four years' of exposure to the Likud. Mr. Peres will not be able to get his own way in government (and there is still much doubt about what his own way is) but be will be able to block policies he doesn't like. We should soon be hearing the last, for example, of the three new settlements, two overlooking Nahlus and one in Gaza, that the Shamir government authorized on the eve of the poll.

On the Evolution of China

We still believe in the socialist goal, the goal of Communism. China had us revolution through this theorem. Mao particularly has the credit of combining the Marxist theorem with China's realities, though he made mistakes.

The great scientists made great contribu-uons in their field. But they did not say the truth just ends there. It has to be developed and adapted to new discoveries. We have to develop how best to accelerate production to improve the livelihood of the people. And right now we think it's for the people to judge whether that policy is right or wrong, and the standard is whether that policy helped people to have a better livelihood and better security.

WASHINGTON — During the final week of Richard Nixon's presidency, hostile crowds stood a triumphant deathwatch outside the White House gates. Inside, the few of us who were privy to the secret that he was moving toward resignation went about the grim busi-ness of preparing it. Just as the Watergate battle had lonked very different from inside, so too did its denouement.

I delivered the first draft of his resignation speech with this note:

Aug. 7, 1974 Memorandum for: The President From: Ray Price

Subject: Resignation Speech

A first draft is attached. I'll be working on additional thoughts for it. As I believe you know, I think this has become a sad but necessary decision in the circumstances. But I do hope you'll leave office as proud of your accomplishments here as I am proud to have been associated with you, and to have been and remain a friend. God bless you; Americans still find Richard Nixon endlessly fascinating, partly because they find him so puzzling: such a seeming bundle of contradictions and conundra. He has been a major na-tional figure for almost 40 years now, a central part of the political experience of three generations. Few leaders in history have gone so high and been flung so low. And yet be has endured.

The Nixon Presidency: Some Mitigating Circumstances Vashington - During the final week Vof Richard Nixon's months.

The writer, President Nixon's chief speech writer, was an editorial page editor of The New York Herald Tribune. This is the first of two parts.

Now, 10 years after his flight into exile, be once again beams from the television screen, excentralization of government. Mr. Nixon saw again beams from the television screen, exchanges visits with heads of state, holds forth on national and world affairs - and is listened to with respect. The explanation for this involves not only the particular qualities of Mr. Nixon, but also the unique circumstances of his presidency.

From start to finish, Richard Nixon's was one of the most fiercely embartied presidencies in the nation's history. The fact that this contributed to his downfall has itself contributed

In domestic terms, the 1960s were the second most disastrous decade in U.S. history, following only the 1860s, ravaged by an actual civil war. It was Mr. Nixon's lot to inherit those passions: the verbal and physical violence, the escalation of hate, the nots and assassinations. the burning cities and bombed campuses. And he did so in the midst of a bitterly unpopular war, faced with an opposition Congress, at a time when "adversary journalism" was reach-ing the zenith of its fashionable acceptance and the nadir of its professional standards. In a real sense, the battle thet brought Mr. Nixon down was the final struggle of that tortured era.

Domestically, the middle third of the 20th

this as having reached a dangerous and debili-tating point. He was determined to reverse it. which put him on a direct collision course with many who had a vested interest in the existing distribution of power.

But his overriding concern was the role of America in the world. Here, the picture was more complex.

When the United States sought to halt the tide of Soviet advance in the first tense years after World War II, it had the power, it had the will, and it had the cooperation of the European allies. By the time Mr. Nixon took office, America's will had been eroded, the Western alliance was in disarray, and the Russians had built their military strength to a point at which the American strategic advantage was all but gone. Mr. Nixon set out to create a new "structure of peace" that could hold Soviet ambitions in check within the constraints of what was politi-cally possible and militarily credible. One of his first acts as president was to set in motion the process that eventually led to a new relationship with China and thus to a new balance of forces in the world.

Another was to repair the NATO alliance.

and particularly to end the destructive U.S. nft with his friend Charles de Gaulle. A third was to begin working toward a new kind of relationship with the Soviet Union, in effect creating new "rules of engagement" for what both sides recognized would continue to be a competitive relationship, but in which both sides would also confine that competition to means that would avert a major armed conflict.

An intricately interwoven fabric of economic and other arrangements was designed, in part to raise the cost to the Russians of adventurism that the United States would consider unacceptable; and these were used at the same time to induce the Soviet leaders to accept agreements on control of nuclear arms. But all of this required a firm show of American strength, at a time when retreat and withdrawal were clamorously in fashion. The more strong measures be took to make peace possible in the longer term, the more he inflamed those in the longer term, the more he inflamed those who marched under the banners of "peace" in the shorter term. Leonid Brezhnev was a tough adversary: the relationship worked because he recognized that Nixon was also tough. Each knew that neither would let the other get away with anything. # A 'Morbidly Insecure, Lawless Hater' Takes the PR Route to Rehabilitation

BOSTON — It will be 10 years Thursday. He left the White House on Aug. 9, 1974, admitting nothing, accepting no responsibility for the damage he had done to the country or the crucky to individuals. He lifted his arms in that grotesquely inappropriate "V," climbed into the helicopter and was gone.

But of course he was not gone. He has spent these 10 years feverishly working to rehabilitate himself, using what he always thought mattered more than substance: public rela-tions. His strategy has been to talk and write about the higher things, refusing always to discuss Watergate, and thus to make his country forget his criminality.

The strategy has worked. When a former assistant interviewed him this year and sold the result to the CBS television network, Newsweek complimented him on his candor! Other great press institutions that once criticized him -and on which he threatened to take vengeance — now praise him as a statesman, a font of wisdom on foreign policy.

He does say sensible things about foreign policy. In a recent interview by Robert Scheer of the Los Angeles Times be warned that the anti-missile system that President Reagan wants to build would be "destabilizing" if anyone then felt safe enough to launch a first strike. Each side has so many nuclear weapons now, he said, that no one can really be safe: "When you have 10,000 of these damn things, there is no defense."

He also observed that confronta-tional tactics toward the Soviet Union make things worse for the vic-tims of its tyranny. "There would not have been a Solidarity movement in Poland were it not for détente," he said. "If you have a world of constant confrontation, then change will not be possible.

Sensible, but what makes such statements seem exceptionally wise is the contrast with the far-out quality of the Reagan administration's policy - its basis not in reason or buman experience but in ideology. In the country of the blind, the one-eyed man is king.

It was always true that his political eminence was as much a comment on Americans as on him. What did it sav nbout a society when it chose as its leader a morbidly insecure, lawless hater? And what does it say today when we treat with respectful deference the only president of the United States who so disgraced that office Americans forget so quickly. And that he was forced to resign?

By Anthony Lewis

they have forgotten this man's endless offenses, petty and grand, against decency. And petty they could be. In four years as president he underpaid his federal taxes by $418,229.

Here was a man who talked in the Oval Office like a batboy trying to sound tough in the locker room. He labeled "candy-ass" a secretary of the treasury who balked at using the tax system to punish citizens he considered "enemies." He used the word "Jews" as n dismissive insult.

But it was not just petty. Reading his own insecurity into national po-licy, he said the United States would be a "pitiful helpless giant" unless it kept n pointless war going in Indo-china. In four years his policy cost 20,492 American lives, and hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese. He and Henry Kissinger extended the bombing into Cambodia, beloing that poor country toward disaster.

He made a big difference by his enlightened policies of détente toward the Soviet Union and opening to China. But he also plotted the destruction of an elected leftist government in Chile.

At home, his worst legacy was lawlessness. Americans were shocked when the burglaries and wiretaps and obstruction of justice came to light. But his successor mocked the law by pardoming him. And the notion that a president is above ordinary standards of accountability is alive and well in the White House today.

Is he not entitled to charity? No more than any wrongdoer who shows no understanding or regret. But now we know that we are not going to be rid of this strange figure, for he represents something in us.

In Ward Just's recent novel, "The American Blues," the narrator speaks of him as a ghost, a malignant genius hovering over the postwar period. "I realized suddenly," he says, "that Nixon was the generational link... I had no doubt that be would last the century, my grandchildren could watch him on 'Meet the Press.'

Behind the Proliferation of Italian-Libyan Contacts West, or at least in softening Libyan attitudes.

ROME — Libya has again accused the U.S. 6th Fleet of making provocative flights over the Gulf of Sidra, announcing at the same time that its armed forces were carrying out large-scale military maneuvers in and around Tripoli. Right after that announcement, Giulio Andreotti, the Italian foreign minister, concluded a successful two-day visit to Libya.

Leaving Benghazi, where be met at length with Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, Mr. Andreotti told si had held important talks on the Middle East, the Gulf, and security in the Mediterranean. Later this week Mr. Andreotti heads to California, to attend the closing of the Olympics — and then meet privately with President Reagan. And in a development that preceded Mr. Andreotti's visit to Libya, Umberto Capuzzo, the Italian Army chief of staff, received a rare personal reception in Tripoli by Colonel Qadhafi. Italy's European and American allies may well be coofused. In much of the Western world, Colonel Qadhafi is considered a supporter of international terrorism and a dangerous champion of Arab radicalism. Yet given the ambiguity of Mediterranean politics, there is small reason to be surprised. Mr. Andreotti's trip to Libva was originally announced as a low-profile operation. Italian companies claim outstanding credits of about $500 million from the Libyans. Foreign Ministry sources advised Mr. Andreotti that a meeting of By Enrico Jacchia the Italian-Libyan trade commission would offer him a good opportunity to meet his counterpart in Tripoli and to discuss not only the unpaid credits but also the prospects for improved economic relations between Tripoli and Rome.

Trade between the two countries has increased significantly in recent times, and stood at $4 billion in 1983. ftaly is now Libya's main commercial partner. The attention of the Italian press was focused at first on the pending trade and financial questions. Later, authoritative sources referred with ever increasing precision to the political aspects of the visit. Italy and Libya, it was stressed, both have an interest in maintaining peace in the Mediterranean; and the U.S. cruise missiles installed at Comiso. Sicily, the sources said, are aimed at Soviet targets, not at Colonel Qadhafi's palace in Tripoli (as the Libyans persistently claim). Perhaps the most important consideration was the possibility of Italy becoming a bridge, or a "channel" as Mr. Andreotti said after meeting the Libyan leader, between Libya,

European nations and even the United States.
Building political bridges between opposing nations is a sort of obsession with Italian politicians. In Rome, Mr. Andreotti is considered the statesman best qualified to obtain a break-through in reconciling Colonel Qadhafi with the

A gradual but distinct change was noticeable in Italian political circles and in press reports at the end of the visit, on July 31. Mr. Andreotti's initiative was presented as a remarkable political achievement. He solved the credits issue and paved the way for the conclusion of new multibillion-lire contracts, but, more importantly, be laid the foundation for new and better poliocal relations with Libya. The general feeling here is that public opinion is overwhelmingly in favor of coming to terms with Colonel Qadhafi. Hardliners seem to have disappeared.

This does not alter the fact that the Libyan colonel is both unpredictable and reputedly very shrewd. He cannot neglect Libya's economic needs, but he may have something more in mind. The Italian Army chief of staff's three-day visit to Tripoli may offer some clues. Since his return to Rome, General Capuzzo, a brilliant officer, has been quieter than a clam. It is rumored, however, that the Libyans want to buy sophisticated military equipment, Italianproduced electronic warfare systems and shortand medium-range missiles are highly regarded.

There have been persistent official hints in Rome that the U.S. government is being kept informed and has an interest in what has been discussed in Tripoli. Maybe there are people in Washington, or in California, who will want to look deeper into it.

always been crystal clear.

The reason is not that I have felt inhibited because I belong to the Conservative Party, whose leader, Poul Schluter, is the nation's prime minister. But any brief answer is bound to be incomplete or misleading because of the unusual complexity of the Danish parliamentary situation and of the subject matter.

Certainly, the headlines have been discomforting for those of us who make up the parliamentary support for the Danish government. They tell of a new defeat for the government's foreign policy at the hands of the Social Democratic opposition, or of the ruling center-right minority once again yielding to pressure from the left. The headlines capture part of the story: The government, in power now for nearly two years, commands a majority in parliament on economic matters and has chalked up an impressive number of economic successes - but it cannot field a majority in favor of its foreign policy.

it has been outvoted on a number of major foreign policy issues. Opinion polls seem to suggest that this is not a transient phenomenon: New general elections, so soon after the elections of Jan. 10 this year, would not change this. And the government cannot get a majority behind it on foreign policy matters as long as the Social Democratic Party will not allow this to happen. Since going into opposition the Social Democrats have been moving away not only from what was Danish foreign policy at the time they them-

I agree with the comment in anoth-r New York Times editorial, "Shultz's Pacific Overtures" (IHT, July 23), that "in Jakarta ... Mr. Shultz did the minimally decent by affirming America's concern about East Timor." But other points in that editorial need clarification.

When I use the phrase "have been moving away from" I do so advisedly, because this is not an either/or ituation. The Social Democrats have frequently reiterated unwavering support for Danish defense policy. and for the country's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The government has expressed its satisfaction with this.

But at the same time the Social Democratic Party, together with some smaller parties outside the government, has been showing an ever more critical attitude toward the so-called double-track decision that NATO took in unanimity in 1979 when the Social Democrats themselves were in power.

Before deployments of U.S. cruise and Pershing-2 missiles began, the Social Democrats called for a delay in deployment while U.S.-Soviet talks on Euromissiles continued. After the Western deployment began and Soviet delegates walked away from the Geneva missile talks, the Social Democrats advocated a halt to missile deployments by both sides.
The Social Democrats have also prevented the government from paying its full share of that part of the NATO program destined for the physical preparations for Western deployments. The government has at times voted against these moves, on other occasions abstained in the ate, and the Soviet Union must be one of the two. It is never easy in n political debate to make emotion give way to reason.

Nevertheless, this is what we — my government and others in Western Europe - must do. In Denmark, we 1/1are trying to engage the Social Demo-crats in a debate because we realize that these questions are difficult and -potentially divisive and because we know that it is in everybody's interest that the Social Democrats yet again he part of the foundation for a longterm foreign policy. Because our parliamentary situa-tion is as it is, it will take time to regenerate this dialogue. The single most important precondition for success is that the alliance find ways and means to adopt a common, compre-hensive and open approach to East-West relations. The difficult balance between defense and détente must be maintained and invigorated.

I have yet to mention the word nuclear. This is, of course, an important part of the debate. No one is. happy with the dominating role of nuclear weapons. I have been arguing - and so has my government - that to close one's eyes, hope for the best and declare oneself a nuclear weapons-free zone is unlikely to help. We live in a nuclear world and must learn to survive in it.

ircumstance Failure of U.S. Gamble In Lebanon Continues To Haunt Policy-Making

By John M. Goshko
Washington Past Service WASHINGTON - The uncere-

were due, in part, to a desire not to rekindle memories at the outset of Mr. Reagan's re-election campaign of how totally his policy goals were frustrated in Lebanon. But the legacy of U.S. failure is evident in the publicly expressed doubts of Arab governments about the credibility and durability of American commitments; in the greatly increased influence that the greatly increased infinence mat me radical Syrian regime has gained within Lebanon and the Arab world through its role in blocking American efforts; and in the collapse of the U.S.-engineered agreement of the collapse o ment for the withdrawal of fsraeli forces from southern Lebanon.

In February, when Mr. Reagan abruptly withdrew all but a token rear guard of the 1,800-man peacekeeping force sent to Beirut in Sep-tember 1982, he conceded the defeat of his most ambitions foreign policy undertaking. The aim was to end the Lebenese civil war, transform Lebanon into a peaceful pro-Western enclave under American tutelage and eventu-ally extend U.S. influence by strengthening moderate Arab forces most likely to seek an ac-commodation with Israel.

As recently as last Oct. 24, a day after the bomb attack that killed 239 U.S. servicemen at their Beirnt International Airport barracks, Mr. Reagan rejected mounting congressional calls for withdrawal of U.S. troops by describing Lebanon as absolutely vital to American interests. He said;

"If Lebanon ends up under the tyranny of forces hostile to the nean be threatened but also the stability of the entire Middle East. including the vast resource areas of

Mr. Reagan predicted last October. Within Lebanon, the government of President Amin Gemayel, havmonious departure of the last 90 ing paid the price of forswearing U.S. patronage and acknowledging Syria's reassertion of its old role as the dominant outside influence on the country, has managed at least a temporary hill in the slaughter of the Lebanese civil war.

That is what Richard W. Murphy, assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian afwhich the Marines left last week

Tairs, was referring to last month in comments that Syria is playing a "helpful role" in Lebanon.

U.S. officials, elaborating on Mr. Murphy's remarks to a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee, said that when Syria was working to thwart U.S. policy in Lebanon, it played an avowedly obstructionist role of faming opposition to Mr. Gemayel and encouraging terror-ism against the marines. But, the officials added, with the United States gone and with Mr. Gemayel under the thumb of Damasous, it now is in Syria's interest to encourage reconciliation so that it can get its troops out and manipulate Beirut from Damascus.

Some Middle East diplomatic sources said that Syria has even encouraged Mr. Gernayel to seek a new relationship to the United States beard an faint the United States beard and faint the United States beard an faint the United States beard and faint the United States and t States, based on friendliness rather than dependence, on the assump-tion that such ties might someday provide a channel for improving U.S.-Syrian relations.

However, U.S. officials said that in the American view, Syria, together with Iran and Libya, continues to form what Mr. Shultz calls a "League of Terror" in the Middle East and that its radical policies and ties to the Soviet Union are direct threats to U.S. bopes of encouraging regional moderation on such issues as initiatives to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Similarly, the officials added, while Syrian pressure has helped to create a breathing space in Lebanon, the country's problems and its potential for re-emerging as a cock-pit of Middle East tensions are far from ended.

original U.S. Embassy was de-stroyed in a suicide truck-bomb attack on April 18. Last week, the Americans moved to their new building in West Beirut, a low structure now surrounded by an iron fence and barbed wire, guarded by the members of the militias that were once seen as a serious threat. The Americans in West Beirut have hired a security force made up of militiamen of the Druze Progres-sive Socialist Party and the Shiite Moslem Amal movement This force has been outfitted in LONDON — The one guarantee season. about soccer is that there are no

Somewhere in the skies over Europe the paths may cross of three international players on a downward spiral after caressing the sport's pot of gold. Laurie Cunningham. Luther Blissett and Mario Kempes are the game's rich orphans in search of new homes.

Kempes, as reported here a week ago, is the Argentine released as a spent force by Valencia. He had been playing and training and hoping with the London club Tottenham Hotspur, but the trial marriage was annulled on Monday.

Polite as the English undoubtedly tried to make it there was no resemblance to the once devastating goalscoring Kempes of seven summers ago. No pace, no form, not even the same athlene physical shape of the man.
"We are not taking him," announced Spurs' manager Peter Shreeves after Kempes's apparently insipid display during a 2-2 draw against Nice in France. "We need someone who can really play to the penalty area, someone sharp in the box to meet up with the good midfield lads we already have. He doeso't seem the right lad."

The trouble is, Kempes is no longer a lad. He's pushing 30, his with a far gentler physical pace than English First Division.

Blissen, by contrast, is as physically fit and hungry and aggressive as he ever will be. He is 26 and be has at the moment two permanent abodes: one a terraced house in an industrial north London suburb where his Jamaican mother struggled to raise seven kids, the other a superstar's residence in Milan.

He is the victim of someone else's mistake. Exactly a year ago, AC Milan, desperate for a goalscorer to keep pace with the Italian mania for overseas stars, paid £1 millino (about $1.32 million) for Blissett on purely statistical evidence: He had scored 33 times in the English League the previous two parted last summer: "There has been there five years, has

After rushing to sign him, the Italians astonishingly then asked, in effect: "Now tell us, Mr. Blissett, bow do you like the ball played to the head or the feet?"

After one full but barren season they still don't know. The directness, the sheer perseverence by which Blissett scored and will score again hatfuls of goals in England are compensations for his lack of the cool and clinical finishing required in Italy.

Over the past 12 months his tecbnique has sharpened up. lodeed, in England internationals he looks like a far more polished player, especially on the ground. But with lialy's clampdown on imported players for the next three years after this summer, Milan could not go on gambling £2,000 a week, hit-or-miss, on Blissett's eventual adaptatioo to its style.

Proic buildos were pressed again. Another million pounds for England's astute midfielder Ray Wilkios and yet another million for Tony Hateley (a raw, young English version of Blisseu) means that Milan now owns a surplus of foreigners to take up the two permitted places in its team. So Blissett, training alone in a Londoo park last week and oow back on the periphery of Milan's team training, waits. And he prays that Watford, his old club, will take him back the way that Milan so sourly repossessed his club BMW

"Watford," he says, "is still the only club I want to play for and I hope they can do a deal with Milan." Southampton and Manchester United showed interest, but the haggling bas begun and the betting is that Blissett's first sporting bome. Watford, will have him back

Lewis Jumps to Second Gold Medal; Cruz Takes 800

-ANDEING

Joaquim Cruz, after winning Monday's 800 for Brazil's firstever Olympic running medal: 'I don't know what to say....'

By Robert Facher

ington Post Service LOS ANGELES - Carl Lewis won his second Olympic gold med-al Monday night about as easily as he won his first, leaping 28 feet and 4 inch (8.54 meters) on his first long jump. He fouled on the second and then decided to watch his opposition try to cateb him.

It never happened.

On a night when Joaquim Cruz gave Brazil its first-ever Olympic running medal by beating the best 800-meter field ever assembled, Lewis added the long jump gold to his 100-meter title in a ragged competition that was repeatedly dis-rupted by victory ceremonies for the other winners. When Lewis was preparing for his first attempt, the crowd roared for Brian Diemer as he took the lead in a steeplechase; moments later, they were cheering

But Lewis fouled on his second ttempt; he said he felt a slight leg twinge, and elected to pass his last four jumps. That did not sit well with speciators who paid up to $60 to watch bim, and the final result was greeted with boos. Lewis heard more of them as he walked to the victory stand, but when he received his medal any discontent was drowned out by cheers.

Lewis's was the second-best jump in Olympic history, but far short of the world record of 29-2½ short of the world record of 29-2½ (8.90 meters) set by Bob Beamon at the 1968 Games in Mexico City. Gary Honey of Australia won Monday's silver medal with a final-round leap of 27-½, just after Italian Giovanni Evangelisti jumped the same distance; Honey prevailed on the basis of a better second internal conditions. ond jump.
"If someone had jumped farther.

would not have come back," said Lewis in comments released by officials. "I was sore after the second at Jesse Owens's Olympic-record four track and field golds in Saturday's 4-by-100 relay.

There were no boos for Cruz. Looking back at the field, he ran away with the gold in the Olympicrecord time of 1:43.00.

His triumph over Sebastian Coe, Earl Jones, Billy Konchellah, Don-ato Sabia, Edwin Koech, Johnny Gray and Steve Ovett climaxed a remarkable four-round series in the most competitive event of the

It also highlighted a feast of eight finals in which Lewis moved a step closer to a record-tying goal, Roger Kingdom upset world champion Greg Foster in the 110-meter hurdles and Valerie Brisco-Hooks turned the tables oo ber U.S. teammate, Chandra Cheeseborough, in linte of Romania in the women's 800, Tessa Sanderson of Britain in the women's javelin, Alberto Cova of Italy in the 10,000 meters and Juha Trainen of Finland in the hammer throw.

There was also a memorable nonmedal performance, by Bert Cameron of Jamaica, the world champion at 400 meters. Cameron temporarily pulled up on the backstretch of his semifinal, clutching his left hamstring, but then accelerated and managed to pick off a berth in the final with a time of

For the people who drooi over track matchups through the lean years, the 800 was the focal point of the Games. If everyooe figures Lewis will win four golds, nobody knew quite what to expect of a race that matched Cruz with Coe, the world record bolder: Jooes, the U.S. record bolder, and Ovett, the

Cruz had blown away everyone lowing a 13.24 semifinal with an Olympic-record 13.20 in the final.

Foster, io lane ooe, and Kingexpended too much energy in the process. Monday night, the 21-year-old NCAA champion from Oregon out only showed that he has great staying power, but also that he is a strong threat to wrap up a double in the 1,500.

Koech, the Kenyan from the University of Richmood, ripped to a 51.07 first 400 and made a gallaot effort to hold the lead, but he was no match for Cruz's surge around the final turn. Cruz checked the trailers and then drove on through the finish, followed by Coe (in 1:43.64) and Jones (1:43.83).

Only Coe has run faster, with his world mark of 1:41,73 in 1981 and a 1:42.33 clocking in 1979, "I don't know what to say," Cruz said. "It was important to see the Brazilian flag go up. Maybe this will help us in the future. thought about breaking 1:43, but I ran very hard Sunday and I lost a little energy. If I had just one race to run, I think the world record would be broken."

Coe consoled the last-place Ovett, once a bitter rival, and said afterward, "I told him that we were too old to be playing with fire like that. The guy [Cruz] is a supreme champion worthy of an Olympie crown. He doesn't think too much or worry about the speed he runs at, which is the sign of a great

Bernier Wins Canada's 1st Diving Gold

By Lawrie Mifflin

New York Times Service LOS ANGELES — Sylvie Bernier of Canada knew she was diving well Monday, hut she didn't know how well. Not until the last diver was approaching the 3-meter springboard did Bernier allow her coach to tell her how the standings

"My coach said if Kelly McCormick gets 70 points on this last dive, she wins," said Bernier, "Othcrwise - well, it was me."

McCormiek made her last fling a great one, but the 67.20 points she received for her back two-and-ahalf somersault were not enough to overtake Bernier. The 20-year-old from Quebec won Canada's first Olympic diving gold medal and country's Olympic history.

McCormick took the silver, with 527.46 points to Bernier's 530.70, and Chris Scufert, McCormick's U.S. teammate, won the bronze with 517.62 points.

."I'm so happy, and I'm proud to be a Canadian," said Bernier, whose medal joins Irene MeDonald's 1956 bronze as Canada's only Olympic diving awards.

"I feel just as good about going silver-bronze as I would have about going gold-silver," said Seufert, who was on the 1980 U.S. team that was kept bome by the boycott, "I'm just so glad I made the Olympic team and and got an Olympic med-al: I don't care if it's gold or silver or bronze - I've got an Olympic McCormick agreed. Since win-ning the Olympic Trials, she has had the additional pressure of constant questions about matching her mother's accomplishment. Pat Mc-Cormick won the springboard and the platform gold medals in both the 1952 and 1956 Olympics.

She placed sixth in her first international competition, in 1981, and soon as the contest ended, both rushed to hug her and congratulate her. "Diving is the type of sport where people become like a close-knit family," said Scufert. RETORIA. South Africa - Only five years ago, time seemed to be running against the white Afrikaner.

A new generation of black activists, inspired by the 1976 uprising in the black township of Soweto, appeared to have South Africa's whiteminority government on the run. At the same time, a new ring of hostile black states had replaced the friendly colonial governments that once surrounded the country.

The apocalypse, in the form of a major upris-

Second of four arricles

ing by the long-fettered black majority, seemed inevitable, perhaps only a generation away.

Today the mood here has dramatically changed. Domestically, black nationalism. while still potent, appears fractured and disorganized. South Africa's black neighbors are weak and pliant, in pan because of Pretoria's aggressive military tactics and the black governments' failed economic policies. Several of the immediate neighbors, such as Mozambique, have even struck formal diplomatic deals with the width giant to the south the white giant to the south. In the West, Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha received a cautious welcome during his recent visit in Europe, and the U.S. administration of President Ronald Reagan practices a policy known as "constructive engagement" that bas warmed relations with Pretoria.

The Afrikaner no longer appears as, in the words of South African novelist Andre Brink, "a stench in the nostrils of the world."

THE result is a new mood of self-confidence and optimism among members of the white Afrikaner establishment that has singlehandedly ruled this nation for 36 years. Buoyed by these developments and by November's landslide election victory for their proposed new national constitution. Afrikaner leaders believe they may achieve what once seemed impossible; regaining international respectability without making radical changes in apartheid.

Most of all, many believe they bave bought the main commodity South Africa was thought

'We are a society in transit," said Louis Nel, deputy foreign affairs and information minister The present government is not in favor of the present status quo constitutionally, economicaly or socially, but we must have time to change in such a way that we maintain security for all."

The Afrikaner establishment has come of age. Where once it was dominated by wealthy landowners, theologians and racial ideologues, the new establishment's membership list has more businessmen than farmers and is better educated and more sophisticated. While Afrikaner ethnic unity still receives lip service, the profit motive is the new ethic. The rural traditionalists on the Afrikaner right have in the Afrikaner community. There is a great been shed in favor of new alliances with South Africa's English-dominated business community, with whom the new Afrikaner establishment shares bank balances rather than ethnic identi-

Like Mr. Nel, the new Afrikaner establishment speaks the language of reason and recon-ciliation, not white domination. It can even be a bit irreverent when analyzing the system it bas

"Apartheid was a simplistic approach based on extremely naive political assumptions," said J.P. de Lange, who as chairman of the influen-tial secret society the Broederbond has some of the most impeccable establishment credentials readiness among whites for change and an open-ness for future adjustments."

But indercutting the rhetoric of reform are a series of troubling problems. For one thing, the mood of optimism could be shattered by a new outbreak of unrest from blacks, who, despite ambitious talk from the white establishment have seen little in the way of concrete reforms. At the same time, there are ootsteps on the right from the conservative Afrikaner wing that would deal a quick death to the spirit of change the establishment believes it is creating.

The biggest problem, however, may lie with the establishment itself. For despite the talk of the establishment itself. an "open-ended process" in which all of South Africa's ethnic groups will have a fair role in determining their future, there are definite and rigid boundaries beyond which few Afrikaners are prepared to go.

The major stumbling block is the government's commitment to the policy of racial segregation emphemistically known as "separate de-velopment," under which 10 nominally independent "homelands" are being established for the majority of the country's blacks. South Africa's critics see the rural homelands as prisons of poverty and misery where blacks are confined against their will.

The Afrikaner establishment has committed itself in the gradual elimination of what Mr. Botha has called "hurtful racial discrimina-tion," and, albeit with glacial slowness, the more visible signs of apartheid are coming down.

Blacks within a generation should have full access to buses, parks, restaurants and other public facilities, according to many analysts.
Legally enforced job discrimination has been abolished, although the help-wanted columns in South African newspapers are still peppered with ads noting that "Europeans only" need

But most Afrikaners draw the line at preserv ing "separate development" because they see it as the only way they can retain their political control. By dividing blacks among the tribal homelands and denying them citizenship rights inside "white" South Africa, the Afrikaners believe they can maintain the comforting myth that they are not a small minority among a 73percent black majority but instead a white nation among other, equally small, black nations,

Not every Afrikaner leader shares the government's faith in separate development — Mr. de Lange says the policy is "dead as a dodo" — and some see the homelands as dismal economic and political failures beyond rescue. But very few are willing to contemplate a future of Westernstyle democracy, including desegregation of maor institutions and a one-person, one-vote system of majority rule.

"The borderline will be drawn at self-determi-"The borderline will be drawn at self-determination —in the church, in politics, in education, in living space and group facilities," wrote Willem de Klerk, editor of Rapport, the largest Afrikaans-language newspaper, and a founder of the Verligte, or "enlightened," reform movement in Afrikanerdom, in a recent article. "Those are the nonnegotiable aspects with the Afrikaner will defend with force of name." Afrikaner will defend with force of arms."

Many Verligtes contend that what is new and important on the South African scene is their willingness to at least begin to negotiate. If their blueprint of what the future will look like is blurry and imprecise, they say, that is because the details will be hammered out among whites, blacks and browns at future bargaining tables.

It is also, some whisper, because the Nationalist government cannot afford, at this juncture, to reveal to its traditional followers exactly where it is heading for fear of losing support on

"We have to get rid of apartheid without the people noticing it," said Willie Esterhuyse, pohicial philosophy professor at the University of Stellenbosch. "It's something you can't spell out in detail now, something that has to grow in the hearts and minds of the people."

Cuba Livens Up TV, Radio Broadcasts

By Joseph B. Treaster

AVANA — There is a new look to the televised evening news in the Cuhan capital and some Western diplomats think it has something to do with Radio Marti, a special segment of Voice of America radio programming that may be broadcasting to Cuba by the end of the year.

For years, when Cubans turned on their television sets for the news, they were greeted by a solemn-faced announcer sitting at a plain desk reading reports of local and foreign events.
In the last six months, however, the government has begun livening up the news and the rest of its television programming with new stage sets, rear-projected charts, maps, pho-tographs and far more film footage from the field.

The radio stations have been invigorated, too, with more popular music, dramas, documentaries and dynamic pacing. And television, radio and the government-controlled press are carrying more criticism of such matters as poor performance in factories, Cuban government officials say it is all part of an evolutionary process that has been in the works for years. Western diplomats, however, say they are certain that the changes have come about because the government wants to be in a position to compete favorably with Radio Marti.

Radio Marti, which the Reagan administration initially hoped to have on the air in January, was approved by Congress in the fall of 1983 to serve as a "consistently reliable and authoritative source of accurate, objective and comprehensive news" for Cubans. But the Cuban government is bracing for an onslaught of propaganda against President Fidel Castro and the Communist society he has built since the 1959 revolution. Cuban officials point out that a group of supporters of Ronald Reagan urged the creation of an anti-Castro radio station even before Mr. Reagan was elected president, and they have noted press reports that Radio Marti is being operated by Cuban exiles, who are vehemently opposed to Mr. Castro.

Two months ago Mr. Reagan named Jorge Mas Canosa, a Cuban exile businessman in Miami, as chairman of a nine-member board that is to oversee the operation of Radio Marti. Mr. Mas Canosa took part in the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961 and was a commentator on Radio Swan, an anti-Castro station that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency operated on Swan Island in the Caribbean in the 1960s.

In a confirmation hearing last month. Mr. Mas Canosa told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that Radio Marti would be an objective broadcast service and would not try to incite rebellion against Mr. Castro. Radio Marti. Mr. Mas Canosa told the senators, "will be a useful and peaceful means of providing the Cuban people with information that they are denied by the Cu-

ARLIER this year, studios and offices for Radio Marti were opened in Washington by a group of Voice of America employees. A bureau in Miami with a staff of about a dozen people is planned and the radio signal to Cuba is to be beamed from a Voice of America transmitter in the Florida Keys, according to officials in Washington.

Congress has allocated $25 million to operate Radio Marti for two years. It is eventually expected to broadcast up to 14 hours a day.

Senior Cuban officials have condemned Radio Marti as "an attack on the sovereignty of our nation." They were immediately angered when the Reagan administration named the new radio station for Jose Marti. who died in 1895 in a battle with Spanish troops and is one of the most revered heroes of the Cuban independence movement.

One of Cuba's responses, officials in Havana have suggested, may be interference on a major scale with radio and television broadcasting in the southeastern United States.

Some middle-level Cuban officials acknowledged that, whatever plans the Cuban government might have had to make its radio and television more interesting, they might not have been put into effect had it not been for Radio Marti's impending debut

"I wouldn't say there was no connection,"
a Cuban official said. "Of course, there's some connection. But Radio Marti is not the main cause for these changes."

Two of the most popular Cuban radio stations, Liberation Radio and Rebel Radio, which was founded by Mr. Castro when he was a guerrilla leader in the Sierra Maestra mountains, have been combined in make a single station that is on the air 24 hours a day.

The combined station is called Rebel Radio New Style. It is mainly a music station mixing old Latin favorites with popular American and British tunes. It features shorter news programs and an increased number of bulletins sprinkled throughout its Residents say the radio and television stations and the newspapers, which had been known for delivering world news long after the fact or not at all, have begun operating in a more timely way. They know this because they regularly listen in radio and television broadcasts from Florida, 90 miles (145 kilometers) to the north.

Cuba bas two television channels. They are similar, but one tends to give more emphasis to news and sports. Both are now broadcasting for more hours each day, from early morning until past midnight. Both have switched from mainly black and white to mainly color, even though most television sets in Cuba do not receive color broadcasts. American movies with Spanish subtitles have long been popular in Cuba. These days, residents say, more first-run American films are being shown on national television.

Channels present "Morning Magazine," which runs for several bours with interviews, commentary and segments of film from the Soviet Union and the United States plucked from satellites.

For some, the introduction of criticism into what had been gray, unrelieved doctrinaire columns and broadcasts has been the most striking development.

In a report on television the other day, workers at a cement factory on the northern coast said that production was falling be-cause some of the cement bags they were receiving were falling apart and some packages of cement bags contained fewer than the designated number.

"I think they're anticipating bearing criticism of the system on Radio Marti," a diplomat said. "And they want to be able to say: 'We've already mentioned some of these things. Criticism is not new here."

Dollar Stores Nourish a New Polish Class

By Michael T. Kaufman New York Times Service

ARSAW — There is a riddle going around here these days that asks, "Why is Poland just like the United States?" One answer is that in both Poland and the United States one cannot buy anything with ziotys and, on the other nand, in both countries one can buy anything with dollars.

The point about dollars is not really much of an exaggeration. Scattered throughout Poland are 650 government-run shops that sell a wide range of mostly imported goods, all for dollars

The goods include food, jeans, cosmetics cameras, radios, freezers, washing machines, intrauterine devices, toys and television sets. The stores, known as Pewexes, are found in even the smallest towns. Their expansion in the last 10 rs has created two a rups of consumers "What we have in this classless society," a retired Polish journalist said, "are two basic scarce item, the Pewex economy arouses emotions ranging from amusement to bitterness.

Even to visitors from the West, the Pewex stores seem somewhat surrealistic in the barren mercantile landscape of Poland. These oases of brightly packaged goods are in stark contrast to other government shops and their window dis-plays of a few curtain rods or some frayed

In towns where women sometimes wait hours in line to buy chicken or sausage, the Pewexes offer hard-currency customers glazed hams, paté, anchovy paste, caviar and other treats. What is more, their duty-free prices in dollars and other hard currencies are lower than in duty-free shops at international airports. Brand-name whisky, for example, sells for $4.80 a bottle, British gin for $3.30 and American jeans Such prices, inexpensive in global terms, are still beyond reach for the majority of Poles, who earn only zlotys and have no access to money from abroad. For example, a Polish welde would have to turn over more than two weeks' pay if he wanted to buy dollars on the black market for those jeans at the present rate of 580 ziotys to the dollar. While the Pewex stores are sometimes the subject of lampoon, they also stand as a graphic and unfunny reflection of Poland's bybrid and

HIS is, after all, a country whose economic aspirations lie in the markets, the West. On the other hand, it is a country whose work force, quality control, productivity standards, wage scales and pricing systems are not determined by supply and demand but by bureaucrats' plans and quotas.

It is also a country whose citizens travel abroad, bringing back hard currency and whet-ted desires for consumer goods. In addition, millions of Poles have relatively easy access to U.S. dollars, Britisb pounds, French francs and West German marks through relatives living abroad. All of this provides the ingredients for two distinct consumer economies, one lush and calculated in dollars, the other austerely shabby and based on zlotys.

It is in the Pewex stores that the two come together. One Western ambassador in Warsaw even believes that parity between the two systems is maintained through the Pewex price of a bottle of Polisb vodka. A bottle that costs $1.30 at the Pewex brings 754 zlotys in regular Polish shops. According to the diplomat, the zloty price divided by the Pewex dollar price will always set the black market rate, which at the moment is 580 to the dollar, or more than five times the official bank rate of 110 zlotys.

Tadeusz Bielski, general director of the Pewex conglomerate, which has a staff of 4,500, explained that the original idea for the chain was precisely to soak up dollars from the black market to be used by the government to help meet its chronic need of hard currency.

"In Poland," Mr. Bielski said, "we have had this access to dollars through citizens working cials to listen.

would have gone out of the country or they would have gone out of the country or they would have fanned speculation and samgeling.

Our idea was to act as a sponge so that eventually every last loose dollar would find its way to threat the same speculation. our shops and then to the government, which uses the profits to import raw materials needed for Polish production."

Mr. Bielski said the Pewex chain took in $261 million last year, or $120 million more than it had paid for the imported products it sold. The sales level this year seems worse, he said, be-abroad, foreign relatives, trade and, until recently, large numbers of tonrists."

Pewer chain and the state of the zloty consumer economy. "Up to a point," he said, "you can say that the more there is available in the regular them?" he asked in reference to the Polish stores, the less people rely on Pewex, so maybe. the small decline we are experiencing is a good

> Mr. Bielski has heard jokes about the Pewex system and the assertions that the dollar stores threaten the Marxist concept of egalitarianism. But he thinks the stores and the concept behind . them are fundamentally pragmatic.

"What society gets from the stores is exposure was 4... e. to a variety and quality of goods," be said, adding that this sets quality standards for domestic manufacturers.

"As for the government," he said, "what it. cause of a drop in liquor sales.

The director added that there has been an inverse trend between the volume of sales in the late Polish production."

"As for the government," he said, "what it gets is the hard currency that it needs to stimulate Polish production."

'Corpse' Is a Really Good Thriller

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune

L good West End thriller since "Deathtrap": at the Apollo, Gerald Moon's "Corpse!" shamelessly borrows a trick or two (and indeed an actor, Keith Baxter! from "Sleuth" but comes good with the old double-identity plot about a murderous look-alike twin and his wealthy brother. The play starts promisingly if irrelevantly on Edward VIITs abdication day in 1936, with Baxter dressed as the late Oueen Mary for the purposes of shoplifting in

THE LONDON STAGE

Fortoum and Mason, and through its increasingly devious plot there are occasional glimpses of a more intriguing backstage play trying to escape. But soon enough the deaths are all that really matter, and given London's current dearth of good whodunnits I suspect that this "Corpse!" will be lying around for many months to come. It has all the makings of a small-cast low-budget goldmine. and Milo O'Shea forms with Baxter the most killing partnership in town.

It doesn't much matter, contrary to widespread press reports, that Paul Greenwood so forgot him-self on the opening night of "The Happiest Days of Your Life" as to reduce an already catastrophically bad play and production to an uneasy double-act with the prompter, not the usual little lady hissing hopefully from the wings, but a disembodied voice from the back of the dress circle broadcasting through the kind of loudspeaker system you'd expect for a nuclear alert.

 $e^{\mu} x \psi_{2m}$

 $(v-v_{i+2})_{2,j}$

What does matter is the Royal Shakespeare
Company's inability to find themselves a modern play worth doing on the main stage of the Barbican. For if their London home is not to be used solely for transfers from last year at Stratford, it needs to establish an identity. Thus far it has only achieved bouts of Victorian oostalgia ("Poppy" and "Peter Pan") and now this dire old school farce by John Dighton, which was only ever made bearable on screen by Alistair Sim and Margaret Rutherford shaking their many chins through a one-joke plot about a girls' college having to lodge with the boys in the chaos of postwar relocation.

The problem is, I suspect, that though the RSC can boast brilliant advisers on the speaking of classical verse (witness John Barton's current and superlative television series on playing Shake-speare) there seems to be nobody in the company with the faintest idea of what went on in the British theater between 1900 and 1960. Faced with the need to find a workable farce for the summer holidays, and prompted perhaps by the continuing Shaftesbury Avenue success of "Daisy Pulls It Off," they bave gone back to Dighton where any halfway competent regional repertory director could and would have pointed them instead toward Vernon Sylvaine or Ben Travers or indeed

(since they happen to have Peggy Mount already in the company) a revival of "Sailor Beware." For the old Joyce Grenfell role, Maria Aitken has developed a good line in leggily contorted scholastic embarrassment, but apart from the for-midable Mount, the rest of the company seem not to have the remotest idea how this kind of farce needs to be played; nor does Clifford Williams's top-heavy production, complete with a marching band, manage to breathe any kind of life into a show that needs to be rehearsed for at most a week and then played for a week in between "Dial M for Murder" and "Private Lives" on the end of some seaside pier. The sooner someone tells the RSC about "Seagnils Over Sorrento" and "Worm's Eye View" and "Will Any Gentleman?" and all the true comic classics of my childhood, the better for us

In an unlucky summer, the RSC are also in trouble on their basement pit stage with Charles Wood's "Red Star": like his earlier "Veterans" and "Has Washington Legs?" this is another showbiz satire, hot based on the "Great Dictator" notion of the actor who gets mistaken for a politician. The actor here (Richard Griffiths in a marvellously overweight, melancholie turn) is a failed extra with the Theater of the Glorious Agricultural Worker in Moscow who ends up in a prison camp until his likeness to Stalin turns him into a movie star, and ultimately the likely occupant of the mausoleum in Red Square - unless, that is, he can escape from the death that is a prerequisite for that particular

Left like that, "Red Star" would be a very funny wo-hour comic thriller about the nature of acting and politics in a police state: but the director. John Caird, has allowed the play to sprawl over another interminable and untidy hour, so that we end up with a rambling and undisciplined mishmash of scenes from Russian domestic and theatrical life that leaps from vaudeville to "Mother Courage" without ever finding its true direction.

Wood has always been an untidy and over-long writer, but he has some marvelous comic notions and this cartoon history of an actor in the Soviet Union could with some sharp editing have been turned into one of the funniest plays in town instead of the present shapeless pageant, one cru-cial sequence of which is mysteriously being played in total darkness.

■ Mixed Reviews for Pacino

Al Pacino received mixed reviews in his London stage debut in David Mamet's "American Buffalo," the Associated Press reported. His performance in the U.S. production of the play had been acclaimed. But Michael Coveney of The Financial Times characterized Pacino's high-energy, ferociously busy performance as a "store of Method tics and cliches," describing him as "a man either afflicted with fleas or stricken with the Saint Vitus dance according to Lee Strasberg." Pacino studied under Strasberg, who developed the Method school of acting.

A more sympathetic view was taken by Irving Wardie in The Times, who praised Pacino's "hair-trigger restlessness." Wardie saw the revival as an occasioo "for welcoming Al Pacino to the Londoo

The production, scheduled to run at the Duke of York's Theater through Sept, 8, had been considered a sure bet for an extension. But Sue Hyman, the show's publicist, said the extension is oow in doubt and will depend oo public willingness to ignore the reviews.

Pacino is slated to star in the film version of the play this winter and Sidney Lumet, who directed Pacino's Academy Award-winning film perfor-mances in "Serpico" and "Dog Day Afternoon," Shertdan Morley is going on vacation. His column will resume at the end of this month.

Rhythm and Blues, And Jerry Wexler

By Michael Zwerin International Herald Tribune PARIS — "Can't we find some-thing else to call it?" The year: 1951. The place: Billboard Maga-zine, New York. The making histed "race records" chart, which listed hits by black musicians: "The term is derogatory." The speaker; young reporter Jerry Wexler: "How about 'rhythm and blues?'

Looking back now, be says: "If I had it to do over again, I might have preferred 'rhythm and gospel." In any case, having named it, Wexler would redefine the music and bring it to a mass public.

In 1953, he started producing for Atlantic Records, a young company with a one-room office above Patsy's restaurant on 56th Street. At night, Wexler and his partner, Ahmet Ertegun, pushed one desk against the wall and stacked the other on top of it, while the engineer. Tom Dowd, set up three mikes, one out in the airshaft if they needed reverb, and recorded Ray Charles ("What'd I Say?"), Clyde McPhatter and The Drifters, Joe Turner and LaVern Baker.

Wexler recently passed through Paris. "How about this mayon-naise!" be praised. After discussing the nuances between gournet and gournand, be raised a glass of 1967 Burgundy and proposed a toast:
"Ah. France." Then, speaking about eight-bar blues, he burst into song: "The sun gonus shine through my back door someday." That's right, burst into song.

He tumbled over words, with the enthusiasm of a recent convert: "Remember, I'm from before LPs." Eight-bar blues made room for more choruses on cramped threeminute 78 rpms. "It was one-track mono, we cut four sides in three hours. We produced music because we liked it and thought it would also sell. That was what I call the 'Column A' period.

"Then 'Column B' came along. So there was one column for taste and another for the market. For awhile they happened to coincide." As the company began to expand, they signed Bobby Darin, Buffalo Springfield and English groups like Led Zeppelio and ultimately the Rolling Stones. "We might as well have been selling hubcaps."

Although Wexler signed some groups from "Column B," be never personally produced any of their records; "I couldn't do that, It's like trying to make love to a woman you can't stand. It was physically impossible."

He produced Ray Charles's first hits, including "Lonely Avenue," but minimizes his contribution: "Ray is a walking textbook about music and recording — cadence, accent, texture. I'd say something brilliant like: 'Ray, do you think we should try one a bit slower? My 'secret' consisted of two words -Tommy and Dowd. We'd start: Okay, Tommy, open the pots and let's see what we get here. Basically, I was just sitting there learning."

When her CBS contract lapsed ("I was watching it like a hawk"), be signed Aretha Franklin and introduced her and Wilson Picken "In the Midnight Hour") 10 Southern studio musicians. It is considered one of his biggest contributions, though he minimizes this, too: "I'm more or less Tolstoyan in this respect. I don't believe individuals change the course of history. It's being there when it happens. It was happening any-

He sampled the saumon à l'oseille, "By the early '60s, our New York arrangers were out of ideas, our players were out of licks. And there was this rich musical tradi-tion in Memphis, Tennessee, and Muscle Shoals, in the oorthwest corner of Alabama. Incredible rhythm sections, like Booker T, and The MGs. The bands were multiracial and the music was based on mutual respect between Southern black and white musicians - they all played the blues, they could all fix carburetors, they had the same mud on their shoes. We found each other and got very lucky."

The son of a Jewish immigrant from Poland, Wexler grew up in Manhattan — "delivering booch to chased Atlantic. Since then, operating independently, he has produced Dusty Springfield, Cher, Dire Straights, Duane Allman, Bob Dylan, Linda Ronstadt, the original Broadway cast album of "The Broadway cast album of Wiz." Baldrige Urges Congress To Ease Antitrust Rules

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Commerce Secretary
Malcolm Baldrige said Tuesday that Congress should liberalize antitrust laws to make it easier for U.S. companies to merge when they are facing intense foreign competition.

Mr. Baldrige called specifically for a reexamination of a section of the 1914 Clayton Activation of a section of the 1914 Clayton Activation of a section of the section acquiring another company if the effect would be subtracted an endopoly."

Mr. Baldrige said many U.S. companies and losing out in world markets to larger foreign firms in such countries as Japan and West Germany, which can apply economies of scaling to manufacture products at cheaper prices.

"One way for U.S. firms to reduce costs and regain the ability to compete in world markets is through mergers." Mr. Baldrige said in remarks prepared for delivery to the summer meeting of the American Bar Association in Chicago. A text of the remarks was released in Washington.

"This administration recognizes both the prefits."

"This administration recognizes both the benefit: f mergers and the fact that only a narrow group of mergers raises competitive problems." Mr. Baldrige said.

Mr. Baldrige questioned the need for an animate enforcement in industries subject to intense competition in world markets."

Seawater Spa Promotes Relaxation's Costly Joys

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

UIBERON. France - Under stress? Want to keep in shape? Try getting slashed with a gianl water hose antiriot style, bathing in a Jacuzzi-type bathtub filled with foaming 36-degree-centigrade (96.8 degrees Fahrenheit) sea water, being massaged underwater or wrapped neck to toe in hot mud dredged from the deep ocean floor. Many executives have tried it and have come back for more.

This is seawater therapy Quiberon-style at the Sofitel Thalassa, a luxury resort on the rocky southern coast of Britany. There are two basic principles to seawater therapy. The first is that if breathing the sea air is good for you, being dipped and massaged in it must be even better. Second, hydrotherapy, using different water pressures, temperatures and massage techniques, stimulater or relayer your muscles ulates or relaxes your muscles. For patients with hypertension, however, some doctors advise against it.

But Quiberon is not just hydrotherapy with salt water. Guests can also rest in a room saturated with negative ions released from gasified salt water - to clean out tobacco-polluted hings — or have a facial with cells of onborn calf fetuses.

— a favorite of middle-aged executives, according to the institute's beautician, Yvette Brosolo.

"Executives love it," she said. "Any sign of aging is a mark against them. Today half of my clients are men. But believe me, back in the '60s it just wasn't done." Guests with an extra bulge here and there can stay at the complex's Sofitel Dietetique, where people pay more to eat less and get a bar stocked with mineral water. Drinks at the alcohol-free Sofitel Dietetique include 27 different kinds of teas, although an occasional whisky bottle gets smuggled into the rooms.

Traditionally, seawater-therapy centers in Europe have attracted convalescents or people suffering from rheumatism and other ailments who can benefit from the supposed healing properties of iodine and other elements of salt water.

BUT the Sofitel complex at Quiberon, the brain child of Marie-Jose Laroche Bobet, the dynamic and attractive French woman who manages it, has something that most other seawater-therapy centers do not have; chic, decorated rooms with an ocean view, delicious food, a respectable springer. kling of recognizable VIPs and Porthault bathrobes worn for the three hours or so of therapy a day. Among the past clients are President François Mitterrand of France, who stayed at the spa before he took office; Prime Minister Laurent Fabius; Bernard Lanvin, managing director of Lanvin Couture, and Christian Giacomotto, director of Banque de l'Union Européenne.

Unlike the more energetic style of U.S. health farms à la Jane Fonda, the Quiberon message is that it's okay to relax and feel good about it. "We mother people," said Dr. Alain G. Deledic-que, a doctor at the Institute of Thalassotherapy at the complex. Seawater therapy reproduces the effect of a caress."

Although prices vary, a room with an ocean view at the Sofitel Thalassa is about $150 a day for two. Three meals a day without wine are included. The treatment itself is about $30 a day for each person. Mud baths are extra. The institute buys 40 tons (36 metric tons) of the stuff a year at about $1.20 a kilogram (2.2 pounds).

According to executives who go back regularly to Quiberon to relax and keep in shape, the Sofitel complex works not only because of the treatment but because of a relaxed atmosphere, an exceptional climate, the isolation and beauty of the spot and the variety of other activities around it — golf, tennis and wind

"This place is really for people in a wear-and-tear world," said guest from New York. "I feel taken care of. The treatment alone is not that unique, although the ocean water may be more invigorating here than somewhere else. But it's a combination of all those things. I just take it as relaxation."

But some executives sau that seawater therapy does not have to be passive. "I like the aspects of the treatment where you are actively doing something, and not just sitting there doing nothing in some foaming bath tuh." said Bernard Demole, who is presi-(Continued on Page 12, Col. 8)

At Standard Telephones, Chairman Is Aiming to 'Grow a New Company'

By Bob Hagerty
nternational Herald Tribune

LONDON — Sir Kenneth Corfield, chairman of Standard Telephones & Cables PLC, can hardly wait to march his company into the promised land of office automation fice automation.

"We're going to grow a new company," Sir Kenneth said in an interview last week, a few days after STC announced a surprise takeover bid valued at about £350 million ($462 million) for Britain's only maker of large computers, ICL PLC. Transported by his enthusiasm, Sir Kenneth even slipped into calling his own company STL.

Before he can transform his company, though, Sir Kenneth must win the hearts and pocket-books of the investment commumity. That promises to be a long struggle. ICL has dismissed his bid as "totally inadequate," sug-gesting that STC is in for a pro-tracted battle of nerves. Moreover, many of London's most influential electronics analysts are deeply skeptical about the wisdom of uniting the two com-

It's not one of those marriages that are blessed from the start," said an executive at Plessey Co., one of STC's big British rivals in telecommunications

That STC wanted a big acquisition was no surprise. Two years ago, ITT Corp. reduced its shareholding in STC to about 35 percent, leaving the former subsidiary to find its own way. At about the same time, STC dropped out of the race to manu-facture System X, the main switching equipment that British Telecom is using to upgrade Brit-ain's telecommunications network. In compensation, STC received a lucrative order to supply less-advanced switching equip-ment to British Telecom. That order provides an estimated 25 to 30 percent of STC's profit, but

STC already has diversified successfully into distribution of electrical parts, manufacture of semiconductors and the operation of air-traffic control centers, weather forecasting services, air-ports and hospitals. Even so, the winding down of its big switching order will leave a consider-

That is where ICL comes in. To justify its choice of the com-puter maker, STC executives talk about the "convergence" of telecommunications and computer technology in new products that automate factories and eliminate paperwork, Nigel Horne, STC's director of corporate development noted that most big companies now have one executive in charge of huying both computer and telecommunications equipment. "You can't huy one unless it fully interfaces with the other." Mr. Horne said, The hlending of technology has served as a rationale for numerous corporate links recently, notably International Business Machines Corp.'s 23-percent stake in Rolm Corp., a big U.S. maker of voice and data switchboards: American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s 25-percent stake in Olivetti, and L.M. Ericsson's joint venture with Honeywell

By taking over ICL, STC con-tends that it can take such collaboration a step further, working together at the design stage rather than trying to make two ready-made products work to-

STC also promises to give ICL much-needed financial strength. That contention might be especially appealing to the British government, which has been appealing to the British government, which has been appealed to the property of the prop called in to rescue ICL twice in the past 15 years, most recently with £200 million of loan guar-

Sir Kenneth pointed to STC's strong profits from such mature products as telex equipment and submarine cable. These "milch cows," he said, will pay for the huge research and development costs facing an electronics com-pany with global ambitions.

What is unclear, many analysts say, is just how STC and ICL fit together. In several respects, they share the same weaknesses. While ICL profits would replace those lost on switching equipment, said Douglas Hawkins of James Capel & Co., "I don't believe STC can bring anything substantial to the merger.

Both companies rely heavily on the British market, which provides 70 percent of STC's sales and 60 percent of ICL's. Sir Kenneth said the two have a "useful start" overseas, though further development is imperative.

So far, neither has attained a significant presence in the U.S. market, a gap Sir Kenneth saw as a weakness, "Had ICL succeeded in making a dent in the U.S. market," he said, either "we (Continued on Page 13, Col. 4)

Peugeot, Government Moving Closer

By Linda Bernier

Hashington Post Service
PARIS - Peugeot SA, the venrable antomaker and proud partian of French capitalism, is being Sushed toward a closer relationship ath the Socialist government that oth sides are trying to avoid.

Production, exports and market thares are down at home and broad, and Peugeot, or PSA, the after of Peugeot, Citroen and Talof cars, faces increased costs and ompetition.

Consolidated losses at PSA have ed" at the Pengeot acquisition. een widening steadily over the ast four years, from 1.5 billion bases ($167.2 million at current fices) in 1980 to 2.5 billion francs

And despite the reluctance of oth the Socialist government and he staunchly independent PSA to work more closely together to bail in the troubled car maker, there increased expectations here hat more government financial apport will be required.

While careful not to appear 100 ritical of the Socialist government, SA executives blame most of their roblems on government policie and practices that hinder the coup's restructuring plans.
Complained PSA Chairman

ean-Paul Parayre: "From 1979 to 1981, we reduced personnel world-ride by 55,000 — about 25 percent - without any drama. From 1982 ntil 1983, we couldn't really recoce personnel. And last year it work six months, with violent lakes, to lay off 6,500 workers."

What PSA will avail itself of is as same government financial aid variable to all companies in rance: export aid, insurance for oreign investment, soft loans for sodernization, and aid for investig in underdeveloped regions. Last year, PSA raised about 700 billion francs in government aid. of far this year, the group has enawarded 750 million francs by e Fonds Industriel de Moderni-

Daimler-Benz to Boost Work Force

International Herald Tribune AG, the West German automaker said it will hire 2,000 workers in the second-half of the year largely as an effort to secure the company's chances of making up for much of the production lost to the sevenweek metalworkers' strike that end-

The company lost 65,000 passen-ger cars to the strike and has said that it now only can hope to match in 1984 the output of 476,000 cars achieved last year. Daimler origi-nally set its sights on 520,000 cars for 1984 before the strike ruled out that prospect.

Both ICL and STC also are used to selling most of their products to government bodies rather than to the private sector, where both are lurning for growth. About a third of STC's sales are still to a single customer, British Telecom.

STC's strengths are in cables and other transmission equipment rather than in the office equipment end of telecommunications. Sir Kenneth conceded that STC's British market share in switchboards has slid to 18 percent from what he called the traditional level of 30 percent. STC does not yet make a large digital switchboard, one that Bank of America can handle more than 300 phone lines, relying instead on onidated analog technology. Yet digital switchboards are widely viewed as the heart of future voice and data

Both companies have strengths in research, but neither has proved particularly adept in putting together packages of equipment and marketing them effectively to a broad range of customers. STC contends that it can benefit from ICL's sales and service network:

In addition, both companies rely heavily on outside technology at the very center of their officers. the very center of their office-automation products. ICL's new generallog of computers is to use microelectronics technology from Japan's Fujitsu Ltd. Some analysts question whether Fujitsu would want to pass on that technology to STC. which makes its own semi conductors.

STC, in turn, uses 1TT technology for switching. Though neither STC nor ITT is yet a major force in office automation, both are charging into the market. Some analysts see potential for a clash of interests and fear that ITT will try to restrain STC's growth outside of

THE DOSSIER

By Pierre Salinger and Leonard Gross. 303 pp. $15.95. Doubleday, 245 Park Ave.,

New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Walter Goodman

ANDRE KOHL, super television corre-spondent, bon vivant, pal of celebrities and a sometime musical prodigy, is offered, at the age of 56, a chance at the most sensational scoop in his scoop-filled career. So begins "The Dossier." a teasing tale of buggermugger on the espionage circuit.

If the description of the hero sounds a bit like Pierre Salinger down to the French first name and German surname, that may have something to do with the fact that Salinger. whn is now an ABC correspondent in Paris. and is reputed to be something of a bon vivant. is the book's co-author, with Leonard Gross Andre Knhl, high living and deep feeling, connoisseur of food, women, and music, just could be the Pierre Salinger of Pierre Salinger's

The up that Knhl cannot resist, despite his intention to take a year off in practice the piano in hopes of feeling as "authentic" as Isaac Stern, with whom he once played duets. concerns the past of a French politician who is favored to win his nation's approaching presi-dential elections. This celebrated hero of the Resistance, according in a dossier held by the Soviet Union, was actually an informer for the Gestapo, and was responsible for the death of many true Resistance fighters, as well as for the crippling of an American agent who has since become a top figure in the Central Intelligence

Kohl's efforts to obtain the dossier, to determine whether it is accurate and then to decide what to do with his findings get him into difficulties with the security services of four countries and keep him bouncing among world capitals, about which the authors provide some tasty details, such as where to get the best tartes aux pommes in Paris. Kohl finds himself particularly drawn to a free-wheeling Soviet apparatchik named Gennady Gondrachov, whose nnly ideology ap-pears to he to live the good life, Just the sort of stuff that one wants in this sort of read. What one does not particularly want are Kohl's reflections on national characteristics, life, love, and art. (Turner's oils, we are informed, "fore-shadowed the later world of non-representatinnal modern art,") As dessert for their tale, the authors offer a stale message about U.S. Soviet relations and soggy reflections on the "the authenticity of the creative life." Oh, for a tarte aux pomn

There is also a lot here about the lot of the foreign correspondent, poor fellow. ("Foreign corresponding, the most glamorous job in the business, could also be the loneliest." Naturally, Kohl gets caught up with the daughter of the crippled CIA official. Yes, she is beautiful as well as very fit ("he had oever before made love to a woman io such superb conditioo"), and Kohl does oot mind that her conversatioo seems to have been lifted direct from a parnphlet of the National Organization for Wom-

Despite the stretches of foolishness, the authors string on enough complications to keep one reading. The devotee of the genre should enjoy trying to figure out with Kohl just who is doing what to whom. Is Moscow trying to pull a fast one oo the West? Why is Washington, right up to the man io the White House, so exercised about the matter? Will the French agents beat the dossier's whereabouts out of the Russian agent? Will the woman Kohl loves be saved from the clutches of the murderous old Nazi, "the executioner of Clermont-Ferrand ? This nasty man, hy the way, was spirited to Bolivia by Americans after World War II. Many such elements of "The Dossier" come nut of recent headlines, which, in a predictable way, adds to the zest. The true villain of this sporadically engaging book is John le Carre, whose accomplished spy stories have unfortunately infected other practitioners with the notion that just writing thrill-ers isn't enough. When lesser talents get bogged down in what are supposed to be big ideas and profound feelings, the reader may long for a little less authenticity.

Gold Medal in Godliness

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — The saving grace of American presidential campaigns is that oobody with the feeblest ray of intelligence expects them to produce any act or proposal that is not clownish or contempt-

The voters expect to be addressed as an assortment of boobs and swine, and the politicians realize they are expected to engage in low entertainment and transparent fraud while pretending to be working at serious business.

Americans want their presidents to be upright and serious, but not their presidential candidates. What we have is a tacit agreement between people and politicians not to let the campaign rise above the lev-el of a national buriesque show.

The typical American is confident of his ability to cope with rascals and buffoons, but trembles with suspicion when confronted by a politician who refuses to insult his intelligence. Thus, one of the worst political gaffes of the century was Adlai Stevenson's pledge in 1952 to "talk sense to the American

That soured millions of voters on Stevenson. It gave the impression he thought he was too good to roll around in the sawdust with the rest of the crowd. History suggests that the safe course for the politician is to humor the public's taste for vulgarity, and most politicians do.

This produces such typical campaign-year farce as we saw recently in the House of Representatives with Democrats and Republicans competing for the gold medal in Godliness. The issue was, once again, school prayer. When a politician eyes the electorate the way the wolf eyed Red Riding Hood, the first issue he thinks of is school prayer. Say "school prayer" to any political ral-ly in the country, and the voters will climb the walls and howl and chew on the chandeliers. This is because American voters are Godly people. They cannot be satisfied by leading their children in prayer at home and taking them to prayer at church; they want them to engage to prayer at school, too. But of course the constitutiooal decree about separation of church and state, to the delight of politicians, creates obstacles to school prayer.

What a blessing for a politician. Every time another election rolls around, the politicians can declare themselves noisily for the forbidden religious experience of the schoolhouse, thus establishing themselves as Godly folk while skewering any dissidents as agents

Now all of us voters out here are ooto this scam, aren't we? Election after election, we've seen these characters thrust the Bible in our faces and promise they were going to put prayer back in the schoolhouse, and year after year, we've reelected them, and year after year there is still no school prayer.

Is there anyone left who doesn't know we're being hoodwinked?

If Madison and the other Founding Fathers came back and revised the Constitution to permit school prayer, today's politicians wouldn't take the opportunity to seek their advice and wisdom about running a government. No sir. They'd be too busy cursing them for destroying the school prayer issue.

Maybe the voters would, too, because losing your temper and get-ting really mad at somebody about school prayer is a lot of fun in an election year, and it's a lot of fun, too, watching polincians use school prayer to try to make us believe they are the Godliest politicians of

So in the House, the Democrats whooped one through ostensibly for God, but actually for the Democratic Party. Called an "equal access" bill, it will make it possible for high school students to get together in the schoolhouse before and after classes for religious meet-

Fearing a Democratic coup, Republicans countered with a bill to punish communides that forbid voluntary school prayer, and when the Democrats helped defeat it, the Republican leader said the Democrats' Godliness had been exposed as fraudulent.

This obscene performance does not seem to have offended anyone, and since God is merciful the Capi-tol still stands. Perhaps God, like the American voter, enjoys being insulted when the burlesque begins.

The Bradfields are part of the Elderhostel movement, now in its 10th year, which has spread across the United States and into Canada, Europe and Asia. It is a program that invites older adults back to college to study, for mod-erate fees, subjects they never had time to study before.

Uoder guidelines of the Elderhostel organization, based in Boston, there are limits on the total fees colleges and universities may charge for the course and dormitory room and board. In the continental United States, the upper limit is $190 for a one-week program, although many charge less. The fee at Penn State is $180.

lo Hawaii, the maximum is $200 and in Alaska, $215.

Started in 1975 by Martin Knowlton, a professor in the Division of Continuing Education at the University of New Hampshire, the Elderhostel program spread in its first year to four other institutions and had a total of 200 participants. It then moved into other New England states and beyood.

This year, 81,000 people have been enrolled in courses in 730 institutions in the United States, Britain, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Iodia, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and West Germany. Next year, Australia will join the pro-

From the beginning, the move-ment was welcomed by schools with underused summertime space and faculty. Now, with regular academic-year enrollments declining in some places, institutions are welcoming an expansion of Elderhostel into fall and winter programs.

The Elderhostel participants bave also been welcomed by faculty members, and not just for the extra money.

"That's the least of it," said Professor Charles Mann, who, like many other lecturers, finds a stimulating responsiveness in older students. "It's a rewarding experience,"

Mann said. "They bring a wealth of background and experience, they react wholeheartedly and they are not afraid to ask "Why?" They are an interesting combination of pugnacity and re-spect," he said. "They are not afraid to challeoge you, but once saving two teen-aged girls was one of 18 people awarded the Carnegie Medal Monday by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission. Griffin W. Holtzelaw, an air traffic con-troller from Headland, Alabama. was at Laguna Beach, Florida, on April 28 when he heard the girls screaming "He stood and said the kids are in trouble," said commission spokesman Walter Toerge. Their raft had been swept away by a strong undertow and upset by waves that separated the raft from the girls. Holtzclaw swam 200 feet to the nearest girl and took her to shallow water to wade ashore. Then he returned and supported her companion until a man arrived on a raft and took both of them to shore. Holtzclaw could not be revived. He was one of five of the 18 medal recipients who died making rescue attempts. All were recognized by the 80-year-old commis-sion for risking their lives to save others. Grants totaling $45,000, or $2,500 apiece, were given to the rescuers or their survivors. The commission, founded by industrialist Andrew Carnegle, has given away more than $15.3 million in grants or continuous support to 6.841 heroes or their survivors.

Knoxville officials said three death threats were made against the singer Michael Jackson but promoters said be refused to cancel his weekend concerts because he did oot want to disappoint his fans. Two newspapers and the Universi-ty of Tennessee received letters threatening Jackson and his brothers. Initially, promoters said concerts would be postponed, but late Monday night they announced the shows would go on. About 65,000 fans are expected to pack the university's Neyland Stadium for each of the concerts Friday, Saturday and Sunday - the largest crowds on Jackson's Victory Tour. . . .

In Los Angeles, negotiations to bring Jackson and his brothers to the Forum have collapsed, and the group will probably reschedule its performances there, a promoter says. They were to have performed. eight dates at the Forum from Sept. 2 to Sept. 12.
